

the human retina

The retina is the light-sensitive layer of tissue that forms the innermost coat of the internal surface of the eye. Here are four cell types in the retina, in which light flows in a specific direction through them.

diagrams not to scale

created by emi matsumae,
for the daily dosage

